The Baptist Meeting. The meeting at the Baptist church Stanford, closed Wednesday night with 56 conversions, 35 of whom joined the Baptist church and 21 the various other churchers. There were 4 restorations. Incalculable good is the result of the la bors of Rev. Dr. Boyet and the faithful pastor, Rey. A. V. Sizemore, since all of the immense crowds that attended were benefited, even those that were present through curiosity. Dr. Boyet is a fine preacher, with a soul brimfull of the love of God, and while his sermons are for the most part plain, convincing and irrefutable, he at intervals involuntarily reached an oratorical climax perfectly beautiful. He is filled with a burning desire to do good to others, and in so doing is bordering the path of life with the flowers of love-an example worthy of for the good singing is attributable to fine sermons. the splendid organist. The revival should not be said properly to be closed, but it should last 365 days during each year that is to follow. Each member ary to scatter seeds of kindness, encourage each other and everybody in every possible way, and as a united band should strive with renewed zeal and vigor for the uplifting and elevation of mankind. They should now more than ever before feel duty bound to fill the hours with kind words, the days with generous deeds and have a Christian love and a desire to accomplish good as boundless as the shores of time. Not half the members of this church know the other half; not a half dozon members know every one of the other 359, if indeed a single one knows them all. We can not properly love those we do not personally know, and therefore the logical conclusion is that there will be more fellowship in the church if acquaintance is sought, which is an imperative duty that should be neglected no longer. The members may be strangers when they finally reach Heaven unless they know each other here. Live for self, you live

General Hardin's Interview.

General Hardin has an interview in the copied from the Cincinnati Enquirer.

We will notice only two or three points which he makes. The General claims, "I was never directly, or indirectly, in among friends. Mise Beulah Vanaredale, the employ of any corporation, as attorher protege, was also here. Mr. Samuel ney, agent, instrument or lobbyist during my term of office, before nor since." The General, so far as we are aware, has not been charged with anything of the sort. The great corporations employ the best legal talent. It seems that the record to be manifested. His "Romanism Un. that the General made as Attorney Genmasked" was an eye opener to many. In eral, during the 12 years of his incumconnection he told of the A. P. A., which bency of that office, has not given him consists of two and one half millions of any employment to speak of from private individuals, much less from corporations. What was really charged was without going into particulars, or details ing him; not that they wanted him for an attorney, agent or lobbyist, but that they wanted him to be Governor.

As to the suits instituted thy General Hardin for the collection of railroad taxes as a matter of course, as Attorney General, he brought them, but the General does not tell who in reality prosecuted them -who wrote the briefs and made the arguments? and who received the extra fees paid by the State?

As to the Tate matter; the General him down. What has been really charged against him, so far as we are aware, was that there were suspicious circumstances for him to explain, however innocent he might be, whose discussion, were he the nominee, would! put the party on the defensive, viz: Among other things his failure to sue Hewitt and his inexcusable neglect in settling y prices. Tate's books instead of, his own, thre surrendering one of the two resources of the State in the collection of the amount owed. Also the fact that a short time before Tate absconded, he settled with General Hardin by the latter giving him his due bill for something over $200 in full of all private transactions between them. These are a few of the matters that the General should explain and we hope that he may do it satisfactory. If the General is to be the nominee of the party, it is a pity for the party, that in a close and warm fight like the one shead of us, that he will have so many things to explain. In fact the republicans, in the final fight before the people, will be far more insisting on explanations than we democrate in making the nomination. Paris Kentuckian Citizen.

STANFORD, KY., - MARCH 1, 1895

W. P. WALTON.

THE prohibition convention at Louisville was not largely attended, but what it lacked in numbers it made up in enthusiasm. A full State ticket was nominated. Rev. T. B. Demaree, who made such a poor race against Gov. McCreary for Congress, was nominated for gover nor; Crit Hughes, of Bowling Green, for lieutenant governor; H. B. Asbury, of chaos and disorder. Augusta, treasurer; John M. Ragsdale, of McCracken, auditor; S. E. Simpson, of LaRue, register of the land office; J. B. Finnell, of Georgetown, Will Owens' law partner, attorney general; Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, of Lexington, secretary of State; Mrs. Josephine K. Henry, of Woodford, for superintendent of public instruction; S. B. Welden, of Critten den, commissioner of labor and statistics and R. S. Eastin, of Henderson, for U. S. Senator. It was the sense of the meeting that the latter office should be made hibitionists seem to have caught on to elective by the people. There are 17 planks in the patchwork platform. The whisky traffic is given first place and is denounced in the usual terms. The right of suffrage is inherent and should not be abridged; the government alone should issue money, gold, silver and paper, and in quantities sufficient for commerce and regulated so it could be obtained at a low rate of interest; tariff duties should only be levied for the de fense of American labor against foreign, and the expenses of the government met by taxes upon property and incomes; foreign investment in lands, industries and bonds should be prohibited by law; railroads should be owned and operated by the government, trusts should be prohibited, just pensions should be paid, immigration laws should be amended and naturalization papers issued only after residence of 21 years; no appropriations for sectarian schools should be permitted; all property should be assessed at its actual value, less bona file indebtedness of its owners; fees should be covered into the treasury and officers paid reasonable salaries; the abolishment of toll gates is demanded; insurance combines should be effectually destroyed, the president, vice-president and all other civil officers shou'd be elected by the people; the wasteful and reckless administration of the general and State governments, producing bankruptcy, is denounced and the democratic party indicted for its bad administration. Pledges are made for an improvement in everything if the prohibitionists are given power; sobriety and tory and four children were probably plenty is promised and the year of jubilee will come. Let us pray.

THE career of Hon. David Grant Colson, who will next week become the member of Congress from the 11th Kentucky district, shows what a man can do who is born with brains and pos sessed of worthy ambition. Born a few days before the capture of Fort Sumpter in 1861, which precipitated the bloody conflict of four years, Mr. Colson is not yet 34 and yet he has had honors which come to but few in a life time-His birth-place was on Yellow Creek, where Middlesboro now stands. After securing a good education at the academies at Tazewell and Mossy Creek, Tenn., he taught school a while and read law' after wards taking a course in law at Ken, tucky University. In 1882 he was appointed special examiner in the pension bureau at Washington, where he remained till 1887, when he returned to Kentucky and in the same year was elected to the Legislature, where he soon made his mark. He was his party's nominee for State treasurer in 1889 and made a most creditable race. He resigned this week the mayoralty of Middlesboro, to which he was elected for four years. to take his seat in the 54th Congress, for which he received more votes than his two competitors combined. Mr. Colson is a man of many excellent and lovable traits of character and if he is a republican, we like to sound the praises of a man whose course has been upward and onward and who is destined to enjoy even greater honors. Truly indeed is David Grant Colson a self made man and a well made one at that.

JUDGE TONEY can not seek a full vindication of his claims at the polls. A new statute provides that a person elected to one office in Kentucky can not be a candidate for another position for two years after the time he was elected. As Judge Toney was elected to the appellate bench last November, he can not be a candi. date for a year from next November. Judge Eastin will be a candidate to succeed himself and Judge Simrall has already announced his intention to run for the office. The woods or rather the alleys will likely be full of candidates.

NEW FREAKS AND FADS OF FEMININE FANCY.

Floral Garniture For Shoulders and Corsages-Fichu Has Again Appeared-The New Silks-Other Things of Unusual Interest-Crepon Effects.

[Copyright, 1895, by American Press Association.]

The suddenness with which the feminine fancy was captured by the lovely floral garniture, as it is called, has been surprising, to say the least. For years a floral trimming for gowns permitted by autocratic fashion. Now not only nearly all ball dresses are lavishly ornamented with them, but reception, afternoon, theater and in some cases even church gowns show flowers as legitimate trimming. These flowers are all artificial. No one wears natural ones for such purposes.

While floral garniture is so general, it must be mentioned that few large blosso as are used-very small rosebuds, daisies, violets and lilies of the valley, with a few bluets and myosotis. Still on some of the very light dancing gowns one finds pond lilies, passion flowers and eglantine, with sprays of foliage drooping loosely. The foliage is the most attractive part of it all.

There are many ways of putting the flowers to use. There are corsage bunches, shoulder knots and collars. The shoulder knots have ribbon straps to go over the shoulder, with small bunches set on each end. Some have only a loop of ribbon as a finish, and some have lace. Lace and flowers are beautiful together. Then there is a bunch that fastens at the waist line. with trailing vines or other foliage intermingled with ribbon and lace. Often this reaches to the knees and ends with another bunch of flowers. For the neck there are collars made entirely of daisies, tiny roses or lilies. Few flowers of any other color can go next the face if the complexion is not beyond compare. Others collars are made by having bands of ribbon arranged with a bow and one end to fasten in the back, and in front and on the sides are sewed delicate sprays of small flowers. Some collars are all flowers, but the prettiest have the ribbon foundation in full evi-

The always useful and always dressy fichu has appeared again and in new designs. One very taking fancy is suitable for any gown whatever except a tea gown, of course. This is made of the showy Russian net, pointed deeply on the edges and there finished with small round balls. The lace is about ten inches wide, and this is gathered full to a slight foundation and left to fall over the shoulders in natural folds. That part which goes down the front is laid in folds smooth and straight, and from the waist line it flows out free, being held at the waist by a rosette of cherry velvet. There is a strap collar crepon effects are bought with an eageraround the neck of gathered velvet, and other colors of velvet or silk could be used if cerise is not becoming, and the present assertive tint called cerise is very trying to most of faces. The straps would, to many tastes, be prettier made of chiffon in some becoming and bright color.

I have given more space than I had intended to trifles; but, after all, the trifles make up the prettiest part of women's habiliments. But I must mention the silks, of which I saw perhaps $1,000,000 worth yesterday.

There are fewer distinct varieties this season, I think, but more different designs and patterns. The leading silks for the coming season are the different taffetas. Some of them are two toned, with tiny woven dots, figures and other designs, too many to mention in a week. There is a satin stripe, with tiny flowers woven in, and there is no end to the BARBEE & CASTLEMAN patterns of the new light brocades. One was of drab satin, with a pattern of quill feathers in black and white. There are striped satin glace combinations. I noticed some of the cheney silks in broche effects, five colors on dark with silk or linen cloth embroidered. grounds. These colors produced the most perfect minute blossoms. There were others where the ground was one dark solid color and the small figures of another in sharp contrast, like pale blue on a dark brown ground. There were brocades over which were thrown figurings in the vague chency outlines. Some were arranged with satin stripes, with mottled effect over all the design. Some of the printed pongees and india silks surpass in design and beauty anything I have ever seen. There are stripes, floral patterns in two shades of faience blue, and there are other pat-

FLORAL GARNITURE AND FICHU. terns of broken plaids which are simply exquisite. There are Persian designs printed on pongees, indias and taffetas, and there are shepherds and pinhead checks, some of them in orange and blue, a quaint old combination. There is a Dresden shepherdess design. There are gros de londres black brocades, with satin stripes and overlaid with tiny figures. All these are dress silks, and, to sum them up, they look like the rare little bits that have been treasured as heirlooms in o'd families. They are quaint and bear an air of olden days that makes them doubly attractive now. The

FLOWERS AND SILKS. colors are wift, the figures odd, but neat and prim and yet thoroughly artistic.

So much for the silks pure and simple. The silk crepons are simply wonderful. There is a crocodile crinkle that is a marvel, and a moire silk crape which is the most exquisite goods ever woven. How it is produced I cannot imagine. There is another kind which is called silk crape moire gauffer. It has stripes of plain silk crape, and over that lie moire glints, and down the goods in stripes are puffed those parts that are called gauffered or gathered. I find that I have but poorly described it. This comes in all colors. There is another silk crepon called the chrysanthemodest bunch of violets was the only mum because the crinkles resemble the petals of that regal flower. These chrysanthemum weaves are shown in cardinal, navy, tobacco brown and black, besides several other shades. Some others call this Lezard crepon.

The chiffons and silk muslins are all produced in the latest colors, which are exceedingly brilliant this season. There are dozens of varieties of weaves where-

CREPON AND FIGURED SILK GOWNS. in crape lisse chiffon and fine silk crepons are woven with stripes or printed with delicate flowers in all over patterns, many of them in close Persian designs. There was one wonderful piece of ivory white moire chiffon. Words cannot describe its beauty. The light silk crapes and crepons are really beyond description, and they are woven in such a variety of different crinkles. Some are raised in square knobs over the solid crinkle and others like snow crystals. The white is the most delicate. There are magenta, different shades of pink, cerise, bluet, blue, maize and cream, besides a dozen shades of green.

Among the things of unusual interest I found a new waterproof English crape for mourning purposes. The very best English crape even would lose its crispness when exposed to the damp, but this is treated in some way so that it sheds water like a duck. I saw pieces of it dipped and soaked in water, and when shaken it was as crisp as ever and just as light. This will be a great boon to those who are in mourning. It is entirely silk and very rich and glossy, and I believe costs no more than the ordinary. All goods that show craped or ness unprecedented this season, and I was told in one large importing house that they could scarcely supply the demand. The perforated velvets and cloths are also proving very popular.

WINDOW SILLS.

How to Make Them Useful and Attract

Window sills of the past were mere catchalls for all sorts of rubbish. Now they are decorations for windows. In a library a window sill can be used as a bookshelf. If broad, a double row of books will find a place.

In a drawing room it will form a seat. Cushions can be made of corduroy. which are buttoned, stuffed with hair. Sage green is the color preferred, yet tints of all tones are acceptable if they match the colorings of the room. In bedrooms where a seat runs along the windows cushions and pillows should be the scheme. They should be of complementary colors. If two windows are close together, with broad sills, form of one a miniature tea table. Drape it

In a sewing room the sill can be used for the family workbasket, a box of silks and embroideries, that pick up work for leisure moments. In a woman's den it can hold the letter rack, cardholder, reference books.

Drape the sill with india silk. In studios sills are invaluable for prints and pictures. A cozy corner can be made of the sill if broad and ample.

For a foundation place a low box the width of the sill alongside of the projection, on which a hair mattress should rest, with many pillows; then smaller boxes, which act as steps, of the same length, yet narrower in depth, all firmly secured to the floor. Throw over all Turkish rugs. The sill can be the receptacle for extra pillows, books, papersall the feminine luxuries for an afternoon siesta.

For a bay window cushion or drape the sill; place a table at side, with lamp. A rocking chair will then complete this charming nook.

This broad projection is admirable for a dining room. At each end of the sill a pot of ivy can be trained with good effect. In the center a decorative bowl, with palm, does splendid duty. Put a shelf within a foot of the top molding of a window. If light is given, slips of various plants and hyacinth bulbs will prosper finely.

In the kitchen the sill is a boon for any utensil for cooking, and for articles of daily use, such as canned vegetables, etc., but neatness should reign withal. In a cellar many household stores find a cool place on the broad sill if the weather is warm, or in the winter if heat from the furnace is needed. If a landing at the head of the stairs admits of a seat, let your sill be the sunroom. Make it attractive with reading matter and sit there on sunny days.

In halls where a large window is a feature, cushion it and put upright pillows along the window panes. It is an excellent seat at all seasons of the year. MRS. OLIVER BELL BUNCE.
